

Section 12. The tow-rope from section 10 reaches its end on the path above the river, where five trackers are pulling it upstream, against the current. The middle figure wears the type of round hat and straw rain coat that hang on so many of the boats. Below them, eight men heave with effort as they use a sculling oar to guide their boat, obscured by trees, downstream (to the viewer's right).

On the near bank a woman, who is wearing a veiled traveling hat, rides into the city.
