

Section 20. The street widens to straddle a body of water, crossed by a bridge in the foreground. At the top of the section, on the right, stands a robed Buddhist monk with a shaved head. Behind him is the studded gate of a Buddhist temple, with statues of guardian deities on each side. Directly below the monk, under the willows, a group of five or six black pigs wanders.

In the foreground, bullocks pull two large covered carts crammed full of household goods. Going in the opposite direction, a woman in traveling hat holding a fan rides on horseback, and her servants gesture to the men guiding the bullocks. In the foreground, a man with a staff talks to an elderly woman, while a child with outstretched arms stands at their feet.
